An Interview With Sarah Squirm

by Nicholas Gazin, photos by Kenna Sharp

Sarah Sherman/Squirm is best known as the weird lady on Saturday Night Live these days, but she's been a weird lady for quite some time now. Back in 2019, I saw her do her skin-crawling comedy opening for Eric Andre on his "Legalize Everything" tour. The show ended with Eric Andre making people chug ranch dressing and yet that paled in comparison to how gross Sarah's performance was. I remember a video component that involved her flapping around her long, long puppet labia at the beach. Horrible stuff. I was grateful that I would never have to be disgusted by her comedy again but unfortunately her stardom has become inescapable and it's made every day of my life gross. She's grossed up SNL and General Hospital and she's grossing up everything. Soon the whole world will be repulsive. Here's an interview I did with Sarah.

Would you tell us the evolution of your personal style and dress sense?

I've always dressed crazy. In middle school I would raid the costume closet of the theater department looking for stuff that Grandma Yetta from The Nanny would wear. I don't really know about capital-F fashion stuff, and the capital-F fashion people don't really know about me—it's all so expensive that I don't even understand who wears it!

You grew up on Long Island. Did you ever go through an emo, ska, punk, hardcore, or "scene" phase like so many Long Islanders?

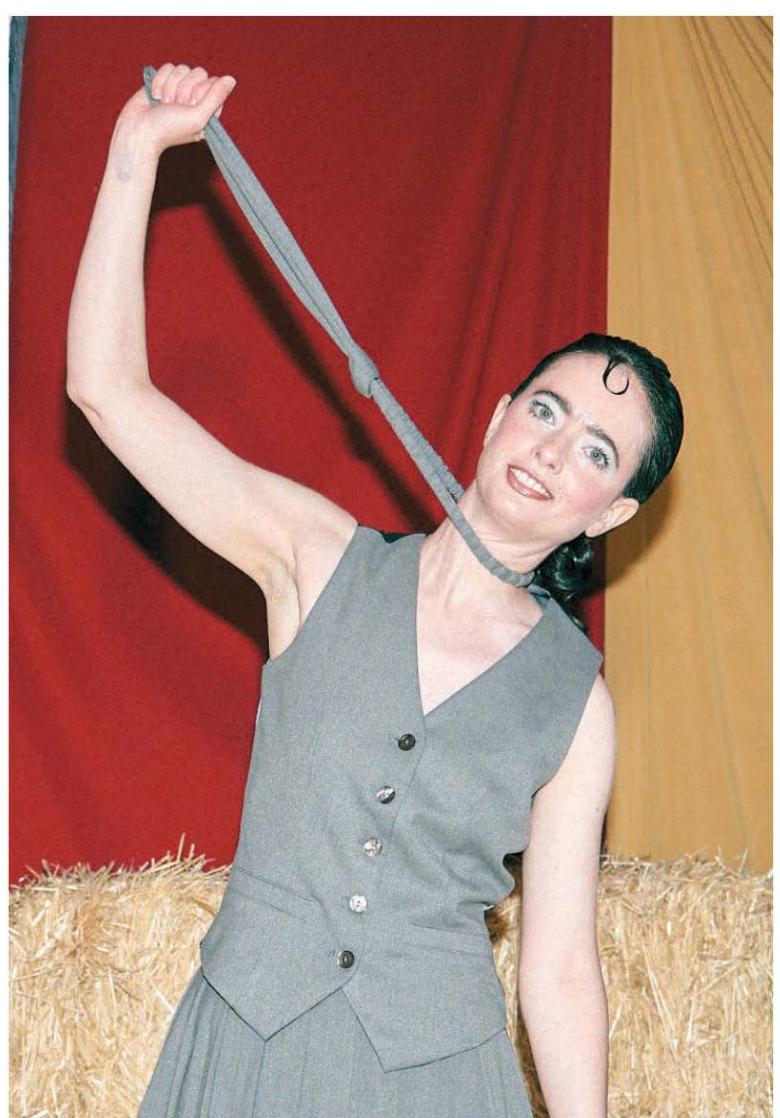

Actually, no. Strangely enough growing up I was obsessed with the B-52s, Cyndi Lauper, and Pat Benatar. My first concert was the Police reunion tour—I was obsessed with the 80s. I didn't get into fucked-up aggressive music until I started DJing at the college radio station and found cool old Residents and Psychic TV records which served as my gateway into metal and noise music. So basically I got into hardcore the backwards way.

What interview question do you like being asked the least?

For some reason I've had one million interviewers ask me "What it was like to get rejected from my college improv team and how did that affect my journey as a comedian?" And

An Interview With Sarah Squirm

I'm always like, how did you find out about this and who cares??? I feel like it fits into some narrative about rejection and triumph, but it's an inconsequential thing that happened when I was a teenager—it's not real life, and it's boring. I've had so much other cool shit happen in my life that's wayyyy more fun to talk about—like, aren't you gonna ask me about the time I made a talking puppet out of raw meat?

You've talked about what you do as "body horror comedy."

I love Street Trash, The Incredible Melting Man, and all that shit. The comedy I do is so focused on myself and my own discomfort with my hideous body that I guess it's been deemed "body horror" incidentally. All the work I've made in my life is me having fun figuring out the grossest thing I can make. What if I ripped all my own skin off? What if I made zits out of bubble wrap and filled them with yellow vaseline pus? That's just what's fun for me to make.

I heard on Wikipedia that Norm Macdonald is an important comic to you.

Norm is everything to me. He's the funniest comic ever. I listen to old Norm interviews when I'm feeling stressed out or panicky because there's something so comforting in knowing that I'm listening to something that will be funny. It's not a tightrope walk—I'm never nervous that it won't be funny for a single solitary second. Norm possesses the ineffable, indescribable quality of just being capital-F funny—it's a quality you can't learn or grow or buy. You just ARE funny or you're not, and that's that!

Norm was also so confident in his own definition of capital-F funny, so I always appreciated that he took risks and aggressively stood by what he thought was funny. I've learned to double down because of Norm. I also learned that actual jokes are important because of Norm—you can't get by in comedy with just charisma and charm, you gotta have jokes for real! I'm a comedian whose strength is less in my joke-writing and more in my ability to flail around and scream, which is why I look to Norm as my North Star. He's someone who didn't flail around and scream like a buffoon, he stood with two feet firmly planted on the ground and said stuff he knew was funny.

Jokes are forever—that's why I appreciate Norm's love of street jokes. Street jokes will outlive us all. You hear the one about the moth going to the podiatrist's office? That joke can be told millions of times in perpetuity for generations to come and it will always be understood and appreciated. But the way Norm put his stank on that one?! Norm's version will always be the best. Also, Norm was a self-described night-club comic. And that's what I am and always hope to be. A night-club comic.

I don't really know about capital-F fashion stuff, and the capital-F fashion people don't really know about me—it's all so expensive that I don't even understand who wears it!

Ask A Gay Doctor

By Dr. Max Goldstein

This is our gay doctor, Dr. Max. Dr. Max Goldstein is a board-certified physician who practices family medicine from his beautiful clinic in Santa Monica, California, where he provides care for individuals of all ages. He graduated from the David Geffen School of Medicine at UCLA. We trust him with our lives.

Hi Gay Doctor, I'm a cis-het woman but am banking on a gay doctor being a butthole expert. I have a chronic anal fissure that has been ruining my life approx once a month for nearly a year. I went to my doctor who gave me nitrate cream for my butthole that gives me headaches/sucks and has yet to fix the problem. I've been taking laxatives for forever yet once a month I have a big giant hard poo that rips my sweet asshole wide open and it feels like I'm shitting glass for a couple days. Then the cycle repeats.

I'm suspicious it's connected to my menstrual cycle but does not correlate completely. I also am a vegan with generally looser stools but once a month get ka-blammed by a Godzilla turd and want to die. I'm at my wit's end and thinking about ending it all.

Everybody has a butthole but only gay doctors are universally comfortable talking about butt health. There's a lot to unpack in your question but let me get straight to the point. Anal fissures suck. They are painful and right when you think you've turned the corner, you're back to the start. Sex, constipation, or just irritation can flare up that fissure. First thing to remember is patience. It's a three-month journey to recovery, and anytime the fissure opens up again, you start from square one. In your situation, I think you are astute to correlate your menstrual cycle with a Godzilla-like turd. Hormonal changes, usually the elevated estrogen and progesterone that happen during the luteal phase of your cycle, will make your turds hard as a rock. And while you mention laxatives, I'd like to remind you that laxatives only treat the constipation that has already happened—they don't prevent the Baby Godzilla from forming inside your colon. You'd need to take a stool softener to prevent this. Something like Colace (docusate) at a dose of 100mg twice a day will help prevent constipation (available over the counter without a prescription). Because you have a fissure already, you could take Colace every day for three months until you're 100% better, and then in the future, you could take Colace just for the last 10 days of your menstrual cycle.

Now with regards to nitroglycerin for your fissure, headache is the most common side effect, but so is lightheadedness or a horribly stuffy nose. However, you can switch nitrate cream for topical hydrocortisone (1% is available over the counter), or you get a higher potency of 2.5% from your doctor.

You shouldn't have any side effects here. And last of all, when everything fails, you can get a botox injection into the external anal sphincter to relax the muscles and allow the fissure to heal.

I have chlamydia. I have had sex with two men (one a stranger and one claimed to have been tested and not have it) and one woman. I am a woman myself—should I tell the woman? Or could she have given it to me?

Chlamydia is a really nasty bacteria because many women don't have any symptoms, and so don't know they have a sexually transmitted infection. Then years down the line, chlamydia will have destroyed their fallopian tubes through chronic infection and make it very difficult to get pregnant without assisted reproductive technology. At the same time, chlamydia is really easy to treat with a standard course of antibiotics.

So everybody should get tested with a urine sample at any visit with their doctor if they are actively having sex out there. In your particular situation, I'd like to address two things. The first is that yes, cis-woman can give each other STIs, so lesbians or cis-woman having sex with other cis-woman can give each other gonorrhea, chlamydia, herpes, HPV, and less likely although still possible, HIV. You don't need a penis to give another person an STI. The second thing is that I hear some hesitation in your writing about telling your female-partner - who we are going to call Donna

-that you have an STI. It's difficult for me to destigmatize a sexually transmitted infection for you in a single anonymous response here, but I do have some advice if you don't feel comfortable speaking directly to Donna. The first is that you can call the Department of Public Health and report that you have chlamydia and that you want them to call Donna for you. They'll do it anonymously by saying "Hi Donna, we're calling to report that somebody you have had sex with has reported a STI and we advise that you get tested." Obviously if you are the only person Donna's been with ever in her life, then she'll know it was you who called. The other option you have is to call Donna and say "Somebody I had sex with called me to report an STI. I think we should both go get tested." Like I said at the beginning of this, chlamydia is a nasty bug, but is easy to treat, and the most important thing is to inform anybody you've recently had sex with, but know you have multiple ways to do this, so just go with what is most comfortable for you right now.

Kinda embarrassing but I have a painful ball on the bottom of my foot. Maybe a little smaller than a dime. Hurts when I step/press on it.

This sounds like a Morton's neuroma, and is most common between the 3rd and 4th toes. It usually happens when your feet are squashed into tight-fitting shoes (often chronic wearing of high heels). Acupuncture can help, but so can a small cortisone injection into the neuroma. Most importantly, change your shoes

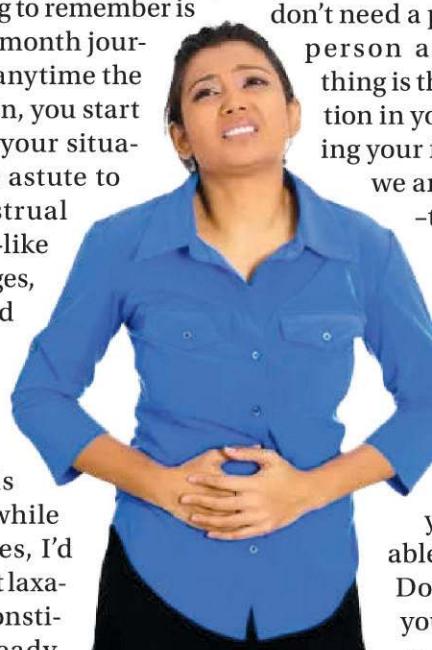

Hello!! I'm 22 and feel my boobs a lot for cancer... but my boobs already feel kind of bumpy and lumpy? How can I tell what lumps and bumps are cancer and what ones are just lumpy tits?! Thanks!

Fibroadenomas are fibrous breast tissue that responds to the hormonal changes around your menstrual cycle. Many women have more fibroadenomatous breast tissue and will have more "lumpy" breasts, which can also be painful. This will usually be most painful around or after ovulation, and not as painful or lumpy around menstruating. Your doctor can perform a breast exam to make sure there isn't anything abnormal, and at your age, a simple breast ultrasound can easily confirm this and put your mind at ease.

Exaggerated girlishness will always have its place in fashion but I think the bows need to leave as quickly as they came. The natural evolution of this trend will be pink garments that you wouldn't expect to be pink or bows and lace on workwear to create a dynamic clashing of worlds and textures.

I predict the rise of "womancore," which may include stained sweatshirts and unkempt hair—a more realistic reflection of modern women's challenges balancing work and societal expectations.

Nudity still packs a punch but it isn't taboo in the same way anymore. Julia Fox and Bianca Censori are making nudity high fashion and it's a power move. Dear Doctor Brandy,

I keep having dreams about my teeth crumbling and falling out. I have now developed jaw pain. Is my dream playing out in real life?

- Tooth Loose in Toulouse

Hey Tooth Loose,

I don't know anything about dreams so I turned to my assistant for help. She told me that in her culture (Filipino) these dreams mean you will die in the upcoming year unless you go out and kill a plant. That sounded a little dramatic to me so I asked my parole officer and he said that in his culture (Filipino) your dreams mean that three people you know are going to die.

I asked my personal psychic's coke dealer about what tooth-loss dreams meant in his culture (Filipino/psychic cocaine). He said that the dreams are about fear of loss. Until I can get my council of trusted Filipinos to reach a consensus, I would just try to confront things that are causing you grief, anxiety, or fear, and invest in a night guard.

- Love, Brandy

Dear Dr. Brandy,

What do you do if you smell a little bit and everyone else hates it but you kind of like it?

- Sincerely, Smelly in Seattle

Dear Smelly,

If everyone hates it, then you probably don't smell "a little bit." Smelling good, or at least not smelling bad, is a very basic way to show consideration for your fellow humans. If you choose to abandon civilization and live in the woods, then you can stink as bad as you please. If you want to reap societal benefits, then you should try to abide by local customs.

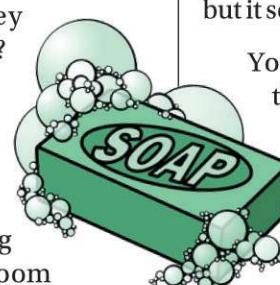

So as I see it, your options are:

1) Bathe daily, wear deodorant. Wash your clothes, towels, and bedlinens weekly. OR:

2) Just fuckin' go for it man. Fuck everybody else. Who needs those losers? What do they know about a good time? Or anything else?!

God doesn't close a door without opening a window, and people are going to be opening the windows of any room or vehicle you step foot in. Being a gross-ass bum could really be a positive new lifestyle for you. Buy some vintage French workwear and strategically put a few brush strokes of paint on it. People will forgive body odor if they think you are a manic genius who is too busy to bathe.

SALESMAN'S CORNER

by The Salesman

First and foremost, I would like to say thank you so much to the editors at the Fashion Brand Company Quarterly Newspaper for giving me my own column that will no doubt span two pages and include 3-5 tantalizing photos of moi. It has been a dream of mine since I was little to have my own newspaper column, and now that dream has become a reality. Someone pinch me, please! Ouch too hard! My mother is going to be so proud. I will instruct her to purchase a solid gold, very large frame immediately so that when the article comes out, she can frame my first ever published article. For too long I have existed in the shadows, busting my ass to make videos to help these poor broads that don't seem to understand the importance of advertising! And what do I get for it? Not even a simple thank you. Just a sad smile like they are doing ME a favor. Not anymore. You don't feel sorry for me. I feel sorry for you - it's my time to shine. mine.

I am thrilled to finally have a voice and to introduce myself as the deep and complex human that I am. I would love to spend my first article discussing my long and complicated love of... [editor's note: article cut down due to last-minute additions]

Hello Fashion Brand Company,

I'm a 21-year-old art student in Canada and would like career advice. I grew up in poverty and, at times, homelessness. I'm so afraid of being poor and ending up homeless again. I want to be an artist and have a career in the art world so, so, so, so, so badly. My dream is to be an art professor. What do I do!?!? Do I need a masters degree? Can I live on art career money? Can I have a fulfilling life with kids and a house? What if I go crazy working an office job and take it out on my imaginary children and they grow to hate me and they never talk to me again and I die alone, miserable and homeless!!!

- Advice Please

Dear Advice Please,

You say that you want to be an artist but it sounds like you already are one!

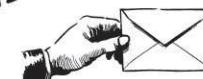

You sound compulsive and that's a good quality for many artists to have. You've also had some experience with being poor, which is good! You know something that the wealthy children who will soon become your competition don't know yet—poverty sucks. There are no stronger motivators than fear and desire. You have both in spades! Congratulations. I cannot assuage your fears of failure, nor would you actually want me to. Your fear of failure may be your greatest strength. A masters degree might help you or it might be a waste of time and money. There is no way to guarantee success in the arts. There is no guarantee of anything, anywhere. Even once artists achieve some success they still regularly experience failure. Some artists find success and still die alone, homeless and miserable.

The number-one job of an artist is to stay alive. As long as you are still alive, your dream is still achievable. Think of the various jobs and drudgery you may undertake as a thing not separate from your art career but as a thing you do to facilitate it. At least that's what the guy I hire to paint portraits of my Pomeranians tells me!

SPRING TANK TOPS!

The Perfect Everyday Basic

Capricorn

December 22 - January 19

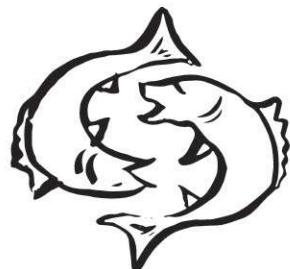

From March 30th until October 22nd, Saturn will move into Aries for its first taster (where it will move again in 2026). The universe will demand change, but this shift will come for you easily. Don't be surprised if what you once loved no longer draws your attention. But do not fret, your love of plucking your pubic hairs one by one to make the time move will return in a few months.

Aquarius

December 22 - January 19

It is time for you to let your freak flag fly, dear Aquarius. The planet Pluto, ruler of the underworld, is taking space in your sign this year. This can be interpreted in many ways. One, it is time for you to let your darkness see the light. Stab your enemy with a (metaphorical) box cutter in a place that is easy to heal. In a physical sense, the underworld could mean the ground. Go to the nearest river and dig until you find a pretty rock or until you run out of Costco fruit snacks. A third interpretation is that you are some version of the anti-christ. Maybe your ex was right.

Pisces

February 19 - March 20

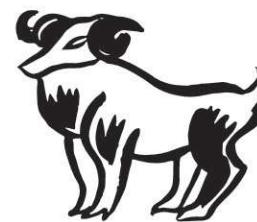

Venus will be in retrograde this year from March 2nd until April 13th, spending the last two weeks (from March 28th) in your sign. Venus in Pisces is a capacity for unconditional, transcendent love and/or the ability to fall in love with a fantasy. This year create a lover, purely the figment of your imagination. Walk around and speak to this lover until they talk back. Create a hair doll from your own hair and menstruate on it to bring it to life. Trust us, this will work.

Insights for Every Zodiac Sign

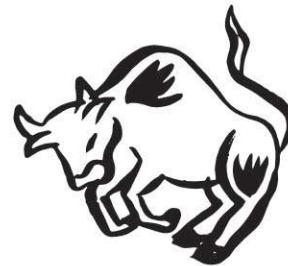

Starla Carmichael graduated with a double major in Astrology and Economics from the DeVry University and USC dual-degree program. She has been Fashion Brand Company's in-house astrologist since the company moved into their Glendale location, where she tried to enroll her son, Little Craig, in Tae Kwon Do. She refuses to say "Uranus" out loud because she is a good, Christian woman. Do not write to her directly for spiritual guidance at itsstarla@fashionbrandcompany.com.

Aries

March 21 – April 19

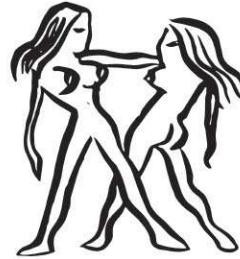

The transition from Pisces to Aries symbolizes a new beginning, like a baby emerging from the womb. Neptune is starting a rare transit in Aries that will take effect in 2039, with its last occurrence in 1862. Staying connected to your primal instincts and sense of self is essential during this time. Adopt a raw, whole animal diet, and roar as you tear your meal limb from limb. The blood on your face is rich in antioxidants, like a vampire facial you don't have to pay $800 for. Die at age 36 like nature intended. Are you older than 36? There's nothing left in this world for you.

Taurus

April 20 – May 20

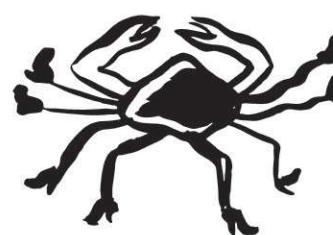

Uranus has been working to bring you new perspectives on yourself and to show you the topographical maps of the areas in life where you are pouring your solar force. 2025 to 2039 is the perfect time for you to deepen your relationship with the land and use whatever privilege you may have to organize a farmer's revolt against the private landowner class. Alternatively, if you are pressed for time, I recommend getting one of those planters you can put on your balcony and try to grow azaleas. I love them, they are gorgeous!

Gemini

May 21 – June 20

Jupiter spends the first six months of this year (until June 10th) completing its 12-month transit through your sign. This is a 12-year cycle that allows you to address what makes life a meaningful experience for you. Does this task of finding meaning in life feel like Sisyphus and his giant rock? I read somewhere that one must imagine Sisyphus happy. So, in my mind's eye, I see that he has an Etsy store that sells bits of his giant rock as grounding crystals. I'd love to do that when my PTO is approved. I love rocks.

Cancer

June 21 – July 22

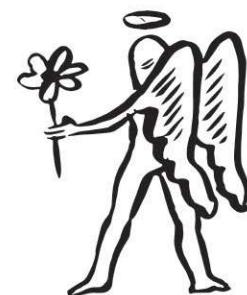

This is not a year to play it small, Cancer. Jupiter is pushing you center-stage, whether you like it or not, and it's time to come prepared with winning moves. The universe will not accept an eccentric new haircut or a new ear piercing either. The universe wants a (metaphorical) blood sacrifice and a (metaphorical) mental breakdown. (Metaphorically) lock all your cats in your bathroom and (metaphorically) set it ablaze!

Leo

July 23 – August 22

It feels like a brilliant tune-up and reactivation of your star (Sun) energy this year, Leo. You are a shining beacon for many of us when you feel alive and authentically expressed. We are all drowning in the sea of modern life and you are the lighthouse guiding the way. You will shine in positions where you tell people what to do. Specifically, please tell me what to do. Venmo you $100? Yes Mistress. Oink Oink.

Virgo

August 23 – September 22

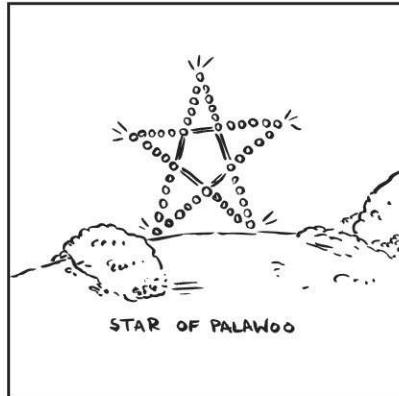

This year, It's important to pierce the veil of your everyday and glimpse into and feel the sublime. It's a reminder that your worth is inherent and you can do whatever you want. Wear the see-through pants! Steal the pretty car! You are a Virgo who is always perfect and correct. Lean into indulging yourself for all of 2025. Practice the 30-30-30 productivity method—30 minutes doing work that drives your need for perfection, then step away from your computer and begin walking 30 feet away, and then spend 30 years in the forest before emerging to do it all over again.

Libra

September 23 – October 23

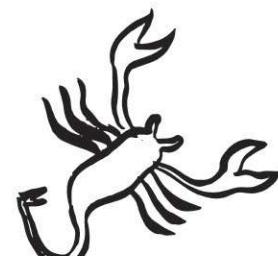

This year energizes your instincts and replenishes your drive to clearly identify what you want and set a direct course to achieve it. Think of yourself as a lifted Toyota Tacoma ramming into the nearest establishment. The boutique will put up a cheeky sign that says “excuse our dust, someone got too excited about our amazing deals” and everyone will have a good laugh about it afterward. Reminding people to get out of your way is not your job. With your drive they should be able to see you coming. Don’t let anyone tell you what to do or where you can’t drive YOUR Toyota Tacoma.

Scorpio

October 24 – November 21

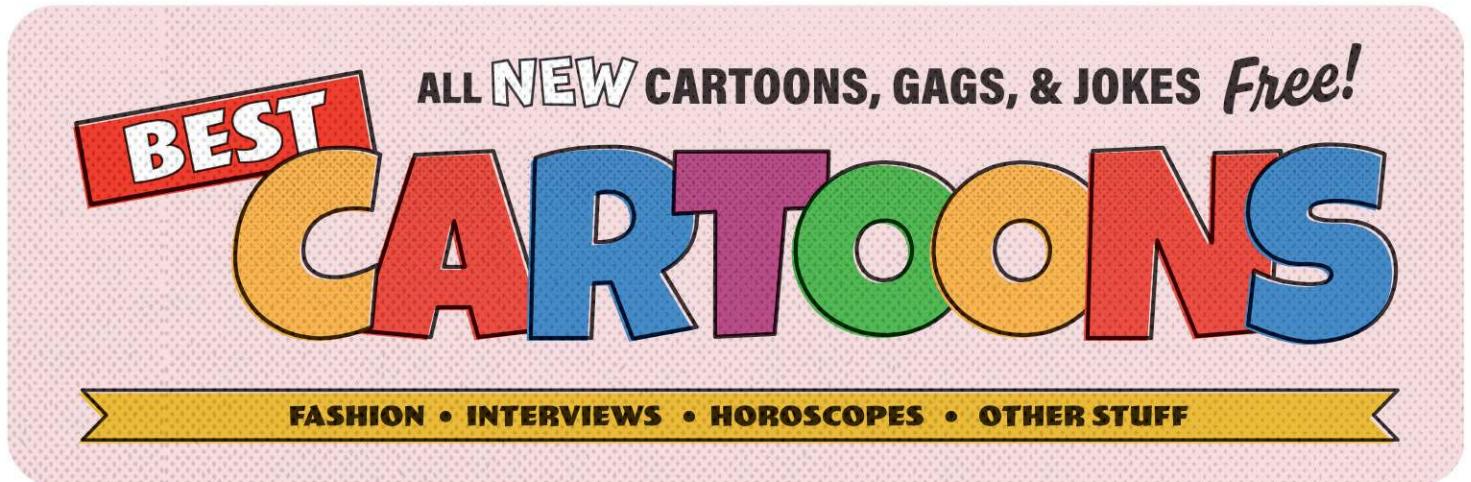

I looked at all the planets very hard, and there doesn't seem to be anything great or life-changing happening for you in 2025, my dear Scorpio. I really wish I had better news, but thanks to all the fracking we've been doing the earth's alignment has shifted about 30 degrees, which has affected the outlook of your year! Sorry! I would take it up with the CEO of Shell or Texaco. Book a trip to Texas and show up at their office unannounced. That is the extent of the fun you will have for the year. Sagittarius

November 22 – December 21

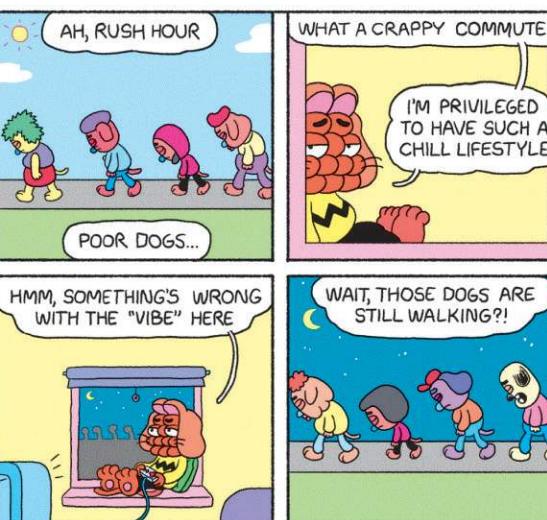

On June 10th, Jupiter will move into the watery sign of Cancer, where it will take up residency for the next year. In Cancer, you may be in search of experiencing and redefining what brings you a sense of meaning in your domestic environment. Since there is nothing much going for you this year, try making a surprising lifestyle change and really change the trajectory of your destiny to fuck with the planets. You know in Garden State when Natalie Portman does some spazzy movements and says “that’s something that’s never been done before”? Do something like that, but add in a little crime and risky sexual behavior to show the planets who is really in control.
